COURSE DESCRIPTION

The aim of this course is to provide new graduate students in the Department with an opportunity to work on the skills involved in reading, writing, and discussing philosophy. We will be reading classic papers and secondary literature from twentieth-century analytic philosophy, covering topics in philosophy of language, metaphysics, philosophy of mind, ethics, epistemology, and philosophy of science. Each week there will be one main reading and one or two secondary readings.

TEXTS

Required text: Kripke, Saul A. Naming and Necessity. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1980.
Naming and Necessity is available for purchase at the NYU Main Bookstore. All additional readings for the course will be made available in a folder in the Department copy room.

REQUIREMENTS

Presentations. Each week a student will give a presentation on the main reading. The presentation should be focused on one or more of the questions that we hand out a week in advance, or perhaps another issue that you think of. Feel free to talk to us about your presentation the week before. Each presentation should involve a handout.

Discussion. The question sheet that we hand out a week in advance should be used in preparing for class. Even if the presenter covers only one or two of the questions, we will try to discuss all of them.

Papers. There will be five short papers due on the following dates:

- Wednesday, September 29th
- Wednesday, October 20th
- Wednesday, November 10th
- Wednesday, December 1st
- Wednesday, December 15th

Paper topics may be drawn from the discussion question sheets or you may choose your own. Suggested length is six pages. No late papers.

Grading. The course will be graded pass/fail. Everyone who attends and turns in all the papers on time will pass. No incompletes.
